

THE MOBILE EMPLOYEE

In today's changing climate, enterprises must find ways of extending critical information to their workers. Enterprise networks must allow for greater flexibility based on the increased mobility of employees. Real-time information exchange, on-demand access, collaboration, and communication are critical in providing competitive advantages.

SECURITY AND SCALABILITY

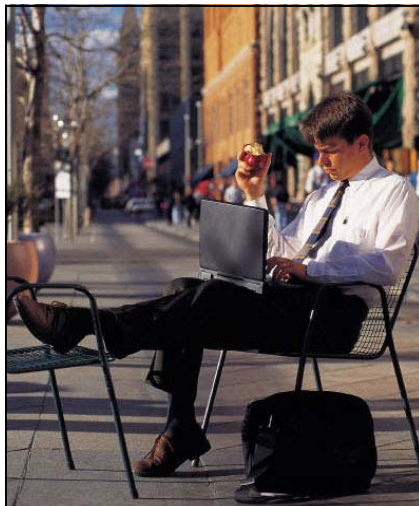

Two main factors that provide challenges to enterprises when creating a wireless network solution are security and scalability. Understanding capacity requirements helps to accommodate a scalable solution and one that can easily adapt to new technologies. A well-planned and designed network solution will take into account your security requirements and ensure the safety of your network.

Other factors to consider when building an enterprise solution include performance, infrastructure changes and management and control systems.

CONNECTIVITY WITHOUT BOUNDARIES

With a wireless solution, enterprises can offer their employees increases in flexibility, faster decision-making, and greater access to information. NOP World found that enterprises enjoyed an ROI of over $550 per user and users were 22% more productive due to increased connectivity (NOP World, "Wireless LAN Benefits Study," Fall 2001).

Deploying wireless solutions can be done at the enterprise level or at the department level, allowing a multi-phase approach to the implementation and can coexist with the wired solution currently in place.
