

CHANGING FACE OF GOVERNMENT

Today's government worker is mobile. And government agencies must respond to that change and find ways of extending critical information to their workers. Real-time information exchange, on-demand access, collaboration and communication between agencies are critical in today's mobile environment.

Government organizations from the local to the federal level will see cost and efficiency benefits by offering their employees immediate access to information, regardless of where they are located. Records can be kept current and accurate and updating them can be done real-time.

SECURITY AND PRIVACY

Security, privacy, and control of sensitive information are top challenges for government agencies. Yet, access to information is critical. And just as critical is restricted access based on the user and location. Authentication and authorization processes are essential.

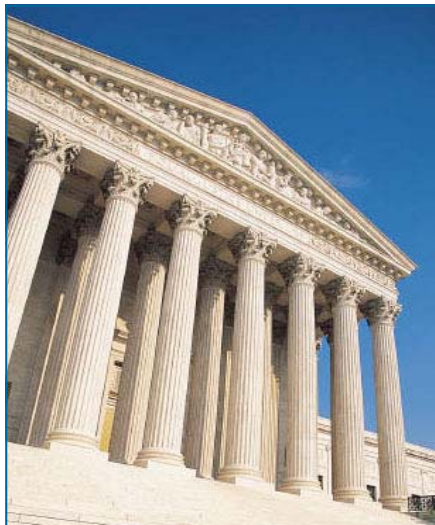

Network administration and managing access to sensitive information can be done at the department level or the administrative level, allowing greater management flexibility within agencies.

SEAMLESS COMMUNICATIONS

With a wireless solution, government agencies can offer their employees instant and seamless communications, increased efficiencies, enhanced mobility, and the freedom to access information from any location.

Deploying a wireless network allows for easier network expansion, provides cost effectiveness, and promotes increases in employee productivity and satisfaction.

A wireless network provides an essential tool to help make the most of limited resources and reduced budgets.
